VIOLENCE REPLACES PACIFISM IN KOREA

Revolutionaries Take Harsh Measures, Is Charge

SPIES EXECUTED

Assassinations Are Reported From Shen Chen

POLICY CHANGED

May Result In Giving Excuse For More Militarism

BY NATHANIEL PEFFER
(Our Peking Correspondent)

Peking, June 2.—There appears to be a revival of unrest in Korea. Fairly authentic reports have been received here of disturbances in Northern Korea; which, although not in themselves of national moment, reveal important developments.

When the writer was in Korea a few months ago the policy of passive resistance, even against Koreans who were serving Japanese interests, was almost unchallenged. The Koreans realised that no hope for them lay in any policy of physical action, unarmed and unorganised as they were against a numerous and well-equipped army. Also they clung to that policy as a matter of principle, to emphasise their contention that they were fighting with moral strength of right, rather than physical might of force.

From what little evidence it is possible to get from over the border of the Yalu I gather that this policy is being reversed. The exponents of physical resistance are, if not getting the upper hand, forcing concessions.

HARD ON SPIES

This appears to be most evident in the attitude of the Koreans toward those of their own people whom they regard as traitors; that is, those in the employ of the Japanese as spies or as officials.

Several such are reported to have been assassinated. Among those is the chief magistrate or mayor of Shen Chen, where numerous arrests have been made. In Shen Chen a number of police spies also are understood to have been killed in the last few weeks.

The change of policy is perhaps regrettable. The Koreans have little to gain by attempting the use of force. The odds are too hopelessly against them. By doing so they only give the Japanese provocation and ground for rigorous repression. They give the color of justification to Japanese military harshness.

However, having seen the temptations to use of force I can see where it is understandable, even if regrettable, that the Koreans should resort to it.

THE CASE IN SHEN CHEN

Take Shen Chen, for instance. In that city there was a Korean spymaster notorious throughout Northern Korea for his fiendishness. He not only aided, he abetted, the Japanese in the worst of their tortures of a year ago.

He hunted men like animals. He arrested them with or without pretext. He watched their torturings and assisted in them. He swaggered about the town with a leer on his face—a leer of triumph at his power over the population. By all the people of the city he and his works were known.

To me it was a matter of wonder that the man remained alive. I could not comprehend the almost inhuman restraint it required not to stab him in the back in the dark of some night or to drop poison into his food.

THINK IT OVER

Consider the atmosphere. A people who had suffered untellable agonies at the hands of conquering aliens, who had resisted and been ground to terrible and humiliating defeat, seeing day by day one of their own people in the service of their conquerors, betraying them to worse and greater suffering.

Resignation to the inexorable law of force in the fatalism of helplessness, was understandable.

Submission to the strengthening of that force by one of their people was not so easily understandable. But submit they did, on the realisation that only by appeal to the justice of their cause, and not by

Thousands See Vanderbilt-Littleton Wedding

Not in many years, probably not since Consuelo Vanderbilt was married to the Duke of Marlborough in 1895 has New York seen such a large and curious wedding throng as that which congested traffic on Fifth avenue at the marriage of Miss Rachel Littleton to Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr. Thousands, mostly women, packed the avenue for three blocks on either side of St. Thomas's church during the ceremony. The photograph shows the picturesque setting for the wedding. At the moment they were pronounced man and wife the sun was bursting through the high stained windows, forming a veritable canopy of light over the scene. To the bride's left was her half brother, Martin W. Littleton. Back of the Rev. Ernest M. Stires were grouped the bridesmaids in their fetching Watteau costumes. The affair was, without doubt, one of the most gorgeous in the history of old New York.

America Only Interested In Welfare And Unity Of China, Says New Minister

Envoy Addresses Leaders Of Street Unions At Reception; Lauds Business Methods Of American Merchants In China

"The United States is interested only in the welfare, prosperity and unity of China," said Mr. Charles R. Crane, United States Minister to China, at a reception given in his honor by reprcsentatives of 57 Street Unions in Shanghai yesterday at the former German Club. Mr. Chen Tsc-ming, president of the Amalgamated Street Unions, presided and was the one other speaker.

Over 400 Chinese merchants attended. As the minister spoke, spontaneous outbursts of applause interrupted him time and again. His words were simple and he held the interest of those present throughout his talk. His speech was interpreted by Mr. Wen Shih-tsen, representing Tuchun Li Shun of Kiangsu.

As the minister entered the spacious hall of the former German establishment the assembly stood and greeted him with acclamation. President Chen, rising to give his address of welcome, said:

ADDRESS OF WELCOME

"Mr. Crane and friends:

"We are keenly sensible of the honor of the presence of Minister Crane. On behalf of the Chinese residents in Shanghai, I have the pleasure of extending to Your Excellency a hearty welcome and at the same time ask your pardon for the very simple manner in which this reception has been prepared.

"We know that there are two forms of international relationship. One is between government and government which must necessarily be dignified inasmuch as all acts must be considered as those performed by the nations' chief executives themselves. The other is between people and people, which is more open intercourse and is more sympathetic. It cements a spiritual tie without resorting to much ceremony.

A FAMILY AFFAIR

"It is to the second class which this reception belongs. It may be considered a family gathering of representatives of the two sister Republics on the Pacific. We are all aware that the world is slowly but surely moving towards the principles of democracy. As Your Excellency represents the country where the principles of Government of the people, by the people and for the people are worked out to the fullest advantage, we venture to meet you on these principles and make this occasion as democratic and informal as it can be.

"We have heard that your Excellency almost makes traveling your chief diversion. In your travels, you inquire into the real conditions of the people and examine into the true social fabric of the nation. Basing our reasoning on this, we hope you will mingle and talk to us freely and intimately not only on this occasion but also on all future and similar occasions when we hope to have the pleasure of meeting you."

MINISTER REPLIES

Minister Crane then made happy references to the cordial tone in which Mr. Chen spoke, namely, the relationship between the peoples of nations. Continuing, he said:

"I have traveled round the world a great deal and have found in every part that people progress if they are not interfered with by their governments. This interference mostly comes from monarchial and military government.

"The new democracies, however, are establishing better relationship between peoples and are getting much better support.

"I wish every one of you were able to hear what President Wilson said to me on the verandah of the White House before I left Washington. I would be glad, indeed, to have you hear every word he said.

"When a country wanted to send out a minister to a foreign country in the olden times, it aimed at the seizure of people's property, and their oppression. Happily these days have passed away."

Mr. Crane then paid a high tribute to the American business men in China. He said that he was greatly pleased with the quality of young business men in this country. He wanted to recommend them to the Chinese business public because they represent American ideals of service and co-operation and are the last words in American business practice which is the best in the world. The business ways of the American now in China are very straight forward, he said, which would result in strengthening the tie of the business relations of the two countries. He pointed out the wonderful business op-

Pall Mall Gazette Says Alliance Is Vital To The World

(Reuter's Service)

London, June 1.—The Pall Mall Gazette, in a leading article today, says that events have brilliantly justified the Anglo-Japanese Alliance.

"Co-operation between Great Britain and Japan," the journal continues, "is vital to the tranquility of almost half the world.

"With a clear understanding between Great Britain and Japan, it should be possible, not only to advance the development of China, but also to effect a great economy in the military and naval force in the oversight of the Pacific Ocean and even to prepare the way for a closer understanding between America and Japan.

"It should be possible in renewing the Alliance to introduce safeguards which would allay American and Australian nervousness.

"Japan cannot avoid an overflow of her population but there are areas of expansion more accessible and more congenial than any which need trespass upon the vital interests of the British Empire or the United States."

BLAST FURNACE AT PEKING TO BE STEEL MILL UNIT

Lawrence J. O'Loughlin Who Is New York Engineer Tells Of Big Project

PLANT EQUIPMENT COMING

New Industrial Enterprise To Begin In 18 Months West Of Capital

Mr. Lawrence J. O'Loughlin of the firm of Messrs. C. P. Perin and S. M. Marshall, consulting engineers of New York, who is in Shanghai on his way back to America, is closely identified with the latest great step that has been taken in the industrial development of China—the building near Peking of a blast furnace for the production of pig iron with the ultimate purpose of establishing a modern American steel mill plant.

Mr. O'Loughlin, who has been a prominent figure in the steel industry in America for years, has been engaged for the past several months with the work of preparing the way for the building of the new plant and will sail tomorrow on the China Mail liner Nanking.

PLANT ORDERED

The visitor said yesterday that excavations and other work recently had been pushed through for the new blast furnace. He said he had completed all plans for it and had ordered the equipment which is due to arrive here in coming weeks. The first unit of the general project, he said, would be a 250-ton blast furnace and he estimated that this will be completed and in operation in 18 months. It is to be located, he said, about ten miles west of Peking on the Yungting river.

Though he said that the proposed plant is located in the immediate vicinity of a plentiful supply of iron ore, limestone and other raw materials required, he was unwilling to discuss at length questions concerning the supply of these materials for the new plant.

HAS GOVERNMENT SUPPORT

The undertaking, he explained, is being carried out by the Lung Yen Mining Administration, half of whose capitalisation is being subscribed by the Chinese Government and half by private capital. The cost of the initial work that is soon to be started will be $3,000,000, he added.

Mr. O'Loughlin was in doubt about whether he himself would return to superintend the erection of the furnace, but he said it is to be built under the direction of American engineers, who will remain in charge after it goes into blast until such time as the organisation that owns the property sees fit to place the direction in Chinese hands. The equipment to enter into the blast furnace now on the way from the United States consists of blowing engines, boilers, pumps, electrical machinery, foundry, stock handling apparatus, stacks, stoves and bricks. The bricks lining the furnace are the same as used in furnace plants in America and are manufactured there, as this product has never been produced in China.

LONG STEP FORWARD

Mr. O'Loughlin offered the opinion that the new enterprise is a long step forward in the industrial development of the country, pointing out that ultimately when a completed steel plant is established every form of steel

Local Hunanese Demand Recall Of Their Tuchun; He Is Blamed For Warfare

Military Governor Of Hunan Is Accused By Shanghai Residents Of Having Started Conflict Now Raging In Southern Province

Alleging that General Chang Ching-yao, Tuchun of Hunan, was responsible of the start of the Hunan fighting, the Hunan residents in Shanghai represented by the Peace and Safety Promoting Society of Hunan and the Hunan Residents' Union, yesterday issued a manifesto demanding the recall of the military Governor.

The message follows:

"It is well known to the public that Governor Chang Chin-yao has ruined Hunan in the highest degree ever since his inauguration in the said province, March 25, 1918. In accordance with the will of Hunan people who have been innocently suffering under his iron hand, we, the undersigned, have frequently petitioned the Shanghai Peace Conference and Peking Government for his removal. Our purpose is to relieve our Hunan people from the unspeakable distress and misery and to eliminate the harsh and heartless acts of Chang. Neither have we ever demanded for a certain man to substitute for Chang, nor did we intend to endanger the public safety by force. What we said above is perfectly understood by our countrymen and requires no further explanation.

PLANS UNHEARD

"The negotiation in the Shanghai Peace Conference, however, has been repeatedly interrupted and eventually stopped by those who thought it is to their personal advantage to have no peace. That all generals and governors noted for their crimes and holding positions against the people's wishes should be removed has been submitted by the Southern peace delegates but this article is not put in operation. In spite of the repeated appeals by the Hunan people in general and the request of the different representative societies in particular, the Northern Government has never paid any attention to the pitiful and appealing conditions in Hunan. On the contrary, they even telegraph Chang to comfort and praise him for his inhuman activities in Hunan. They think that Chang's past misgovernment is not sufficient to ruin Hunan so they encourage him to go to the extreme to terrorise and suppress the Hunan people.

"In view of the impossibility of Chang's improvement in his administration by leaving him alone, we are forced to seek for safety by deposing him. We are absolutely in no way influenced by the political leaders of the North or the South. It is a matter of self protection, pure and simple.

"After the Chihli Army stationed in Hunan had been called away, Chang sent his own army to take their place in Chiyang, and broke the terms of peace on the pretext that some Southern soldiers were purchasing food in the said place. Chang's men fired at the Southern soldiers without notice. And for self-defense the Southern soldiers also opened fire and fighting thus started. The Southern army now has taken back Chiyang, Leiyang, Anjen, Hengchow and Paoching and are marching direct to Changsha. This indicates that the will of the people will be carried out and that Chang's tyranny will have no existence.

"It is apparent that we have sufficiently experienced the sufferings in the past two years under a military government and now we are determined to resist such a governor. If Chang holds his position in Hunan one day more, it means Hunan people will suffer one day more. In addition, we must protect ourselves so long as Chang's soldiers attack people without cause.

COULD END CONFLICT

"Should the Northern Government have been sincere for peace and decide to remove Chang before the opening of Shanghai Peace Conference in compliance with the will of the Hunan people, there would be no fighting in Hunan today. If the request of our representatives in Peking during the suspension of public schools was considered and special officials were appointed for investigation to remove Chang, the Hunan troops would be unable to proceed as the Northern Defense Army was still in Hengchow then. Again, should Chang strictly replace his men for defense for General Wu Pei-fu's army and break no terms of peace in the boundary territory, no challenge will be made on our Southern army so as to invite fighting.

"Under the circumstances, the Northern Government is the one which has planted the seeds of fighting by its long ignorance and Chang is actually the party who started the fighting. The crime of endangering public safety is evidently committed by the Northern Government and Chang's intention of fighting.

DID NO WRONG

"Furthermore, our Hunan troops retreated to Yungchow and Chengchow with thousands of soldiers after the loss of Yochow and did no wrong for more than two years. It would not be difficult for us to have a decisive fight on an earlier date.

"However, the close of the Shanghai conference swept away our hopes for peace, and the Peking government purposely ignores the will of the Hunan people. Tuan Chi-jui even formally declared that Chang must be kept in Hunan as a fighting instrument. And Chang, acting in accordance with Tuan's will, commenced the fight by attacking the Southern soldiers without cause.

"Therefore, the responsibility of commencing the fight in Hunan rests on the shoulder of Chang and not on our Hunan people.

"However, it is our intention to get rid of Chang for public safety. We wish that the government will act in accordance with the will of the people and not under the hands of a tyrant.

"We hope that our views will be correctly appreciated by our country men and our cause will be supported by all."

(Reuter's Service)

London, June 1.—Sir Horace Plunkett, writing in the Times, appeals to patriotic Ulstermen to bring moral pressure to bear on those able to remove the Ulster difficulty.

He advocates an immediate direct concession of complete national self-government, restricted by the strategic unity of the United Kingdom.

Sir Horace Plunkett makes an appeal to Ulstermen to join in an offer to Sinn Fein of a united Ireland, equivalent in rank to the British Dominions.

THE TIMES AGREES

He declares that, while the Government is ignoring the Irish throughout the world, Sinn Fein is effectively assuming executive and judicial functions.

The Times, commenting on the article, says that the warning is timely and largely justified.

ARMED GUARDS

London, June 1.—Since the recent raids on income-tax offices in Ireland, the Property Registry office in Dublin, called King's Inns, has been constantly guarded by troops.

This afternoon 30 armed men, undisguised, effected a daring coup. They surprised the sentry, covered the troops in the guard-room with revolvers and seized and carried off in two motorcars, a machine-gun, ten rifles, two revolvers, steel helmets and other military accoutrements. The whole affair lasted less than five minutes.

A later report gives the number of assailants as 100 and states that they captured 500 rounds of ammunition. The guard consisted of two non-commissioned officers and nine men.

ORDERS FLAG FLOWN

The Cork Harbor Board has ordered the Republican flag to be flown on the Admiralty Pier at Queenstown and other harbor buildings.

The Board deleted the motion to include in the order ships controlled by the Board as they feared that the British forts at the mouth of the harbor would fire and sink them.

SINN FEIN COURTS

London, June 2.—A man, alleged to have admitted charges in connection with stolen property, was sentenced by a Sinn Fein court, held at midnight last night, to banishment from Munster for two years and ordered to leave within 48 hours of liberation on pain of dire penalties. The accused has now left the locality.

No Relief From High Prices, Says U.S. Reserve Bank

Washington, June 2.—In spite of recent reductions in prices, the Federal Reserve Bank states that it does not foresee any general relief from ruling high prices, except by increased production.

The general public shows no signs of being more disposed to economise and invest. All lines of business are suffering considerably from the freight jam. The situation is described as "one of doubt and difficulty."

Pari passu with the advance in prices and cost of living, factory wages appear to have fallen. Meanwhile the shortage of farm labor is acute and the movement of labor from farm to city continues.

POLICE IN RAID ON COUNTERFEIT BAND, IS CHARGE

Detectives Charge Three With Having Plant To Make False Money

Headquarters for a band of counterfeiters was discovered by the police at 1821 Bubbling Well Road, according to charges made in the Mixed Court yesterday against one man and two women. The case was remanded by British Assessor Grant Jones and Magistrate Li for one week while further inquiries are being made by the detectives.

The Chinese house at the Bubbling Well address was raided and paraphernalia for erasure and printing notes was found together with a quantity of bills said to have been altered. The false notes are on the Bank of China, Chekiang Branch, and it is alleged that the name "Chekiang" has been substituted for "Peking." Peking notes have not an equal value to those of Chekiang and thereby the alteration, the officers say, has been very profitable to the owners of the illicit plant.

Violence Replaces Pacifism In Korea

test of arms, could they even hope to achieve success.

Apparently they have changed their tactics. The Korean spymaster in Shen Chen has been assassinated. On the whole it is regrettable, because it can only lead to more suffering—but they have. Reports have come—mostly underground—of numerous assassinations of Koreans by Koreans. The war is being directed now not against the Japanese, but against the enemies among their own people. If it continues Korea will achieve the atmosphere of the Vendetta and the Mafia.

STILL FIGHT JAPAN

Organised resistance against Japanese rule has not been abandoned, although conditions in the country are admittedly less active. A report comes of a secret gathering in Antung, on the Chinese border, of a large number of representatives from all over the country to plan further demonstrations against Japanese rule.

NOT MUCH IMPROVED

According to these reports, which come from various sources, the Japanese got wind of the meeting, broke into it, killed one of the leaders who was attempting to escape, and arrested several others.

The man killed was S. E. Hahm, one of the leaders of the secret National Society organised last Autumn and also of the federation of young men's societies.

The state of Korea, then, is not much improved. The Japanese have introduced some reforms, it is true; but such as have been introduced are still superficial and still come with glacial slowness.

The Japanese have not yet awakened to the depth and scope of the problem with which Korea confronts them if they are to rule Korea peacefully. I wonder whether they will.

Held As Burglar; Attempts To End His Life In Cell

Chinese Accused Of Robbing Nine Foreign Homes Is Captured Here

Accused of robbing nine foreign homes in the Sinza and Hongkew districts, a Chinese who was arrested early yesterday morning attempted to commit suicide in a cell at the Central police station later in the day it was said by Chinese attaches. Foreign officials said they had only the story of the Chinese. He tried to beat out his brains against the steel door of his cell but was prevented from seriously injuring himself.

The man's case will be brought before the Mixed Court today when a remand for one week for further investigation will be asked.

The robberies of which the prisoner is accused took place in Weihaiwei Road, Wangkasha Gardens and Range Road.

POINTS OUT CONTRAST

"When I am seated in this building, I cannot but recall the contrast in methods of education between the Germans and the Americans. A few years ago, we were fascinated by German science and progress. But the aims were as strongly opposite as can be. The American aim was for the welfare and service of the world, while the German was for their private gain.

"America was going in a gradual process of evolution. Germany centered on plans for enslaving the peoples of the world and on destruction with results all now are familiar with. These false ideas should be left with the disaster of the Germans.

Leather Workers Return To Their Lasts To Save Their Positions

"The cobbler sticks to his last."

Anyway, the Japanese shoemakers who went on strike several weeks ago have decided that this is a wise procedure; so they have gone back to work rather than forfeit their meal tickets.

A threat by the employers in 20 shops which were abandoned by about 90 workers, to import artisans from Japan to fill the vacant positions, brought about the end of the strike. All the shops are working with full crews today.

Citing the high cost of rice and other commodities as their excuse, the shoemakers had demanded an increase in pay. They returned to work at the old scale which ranges from $25 to $90 a month.

Fight Over Choice Of Local Municipal Advisors Is Now On

Chamber Of Commerce Said To Have Decided To Elect Own Men

Just what organisation or organisations should elect the five members who will sit as members of the Advisory Committee to the Municipal Council will be the subject of discussion at meetings of the local Chinese institutions in the near future.

The Cantonese Guild has called a mass meeting tomorrow to protest against the alleged decision of the Chamber of Commerce to select the board among its own members, some 300 in all. It is reported that the chamber at a recent meeting reached the decision to create the committee from among some of the members. Several of the members of the Chamber were dissatisfied, because they were not nominated.

The Cantonese Guild hold that the action will be illegal as it represents about 100,000 Cantonese residents here, most of whom are taxpayers. Similar protests are expected to be made by other leading associations, although none has yet taken any definite line of action.

It will be remembered that the first local organisation that agitated for municipal representation was the Street Union. It is unlikely that this will remain silent if the Chamber decides to ignore it. The biggest guild of Shanghai, of course, is the Ningpo Guild, representing almost half of a million residents. It is probable that it will also claim a share in the election.

Smiles from the Mixed Court

With the old adage in mind that "a stitch in time saves nine," Yuen Ching-hung and his fair companion, Miss Zee Lui-sz, have put the maxim to the test and learned that it works. Neither of them got nine, but the man will serve one year and the woman two months for dabbling in sewing circles.

Lui Ying-kwe told his troubles to British Assessor Blackburn and Magistrate Loh in the Mixed Court yesterday. He had 48 parcels of perfectly good thread, estimated as being capable of producing some four million, three hundred and eighty-nine thousand stitches in time.

Yuen negotiated for the purchase of the time-savers and a deal was made. The thread was delivered but Yuen was short of cash, $280 being the price agreed upon.

"Stroll down the street with me and I will get the money," suggested Yuen.

"Sure," agreed Lui.

And when they returned the thread and Miss Zee were missing.

The Police and the Court did the rest.

RUSSIAN SHIPS IN COMMISSION AFTER TROUBLE

Crews Of Vessels In Port Here Agree To Take Ships On Run

After having been tied up for several weeks through a complicated misunderstanding between the crews and the management, ships of the Russian Volunteer Fleet on the Orient run are once more in commission, it was announced yesterday. The Simbirsk, which has been in port since May 8, is to sail for Vladivostok, via Nagasaki, next Tuesday and the Penza left Nagasaki yesterday for Shanghai. She is expected to arrive late today or early tomorrow.

Movement of the Erivan, now in port, is uncertain and the Simferopol and Indigirka are still under repairs at the Yangtszepoo dock in the plant of the New Engineering and Shipbuilding Company.

Various reports, none of them very definite, have been circulated about the tying up of the ships of the fleet. It is known that the management here recently decided to accept the Constantinople committee as supreme authority and to practically ignore the Vladivostok committee.

It is generally believed that this was the reason for the action of the sailors in refusing to take out the Simbirsk after a report had been received that it was the intention of the Constantinople committee to remove to other runs the vessels now plying between this port and Vladivostok.

Cheap Rice Mart Opens Tomorrow

Over 1,000 Piculs Ready To Be Sold At $7.35 Each

Plans for the inauguration of the two low price rice exchanges to be opened tomorrow in two places in Nantao were formulated yesterday at a meeting of the Magistrate of the City, Mr. Shea Pao-chang, the leading rice merchants and the members of the Nantao Municipal Council, Chamber of Commerce and Benevolent Societies. One will be established at the Temple of Dragon King, where the meeting was held while the other will be located at the Boatmen's Guild.

Over 1,000 piculs of rice originally stored in Pootung has been purchased by the Magistrate at cost and will be sold at 1,000 coppers or $7.35 per picul. More of the cereal is being ordered from Kiangsi, where the Governor has been requested to allow its exportation and exempt it from all taxation.

The price of rice remains firm at $10.80. In some shops, in Chapei, the $11 record was reached. Rumors are current that there have been riots in Pootung, but no such report has yet been confirmed. The opening of the exchanges tomorrow is expected to relieve the situation temporarily. An inventory taken yesterday showed that the stock here can last only two more weeks.

Amundsen, Long Lost In Arctic, Safe, Is Report

Roald Amundsen discoverer of the South Pole, has arrived at Anadir, Siberia, according to a despatch from Nome, Alaska. For more than nineteen months nothing had been heard of the noted explorer and his shipmates who started for the North Pole in the schooner Maud. The last heard from the party was in September, 1918, when the Maud took oil at Dixson Island, in the White Sea. The vessel than sailed off to the northwest through the rapidly freezing Arctic. The purpose of Amundsen's trip to the Arctic was not primarily to reach the North Pole, but to make scientific observations and to study the drift of the polar ice, and oceanic conditions in the far north.

ALLAY FEARS OF FRANCE AS TO "RED" TRADE

(Reuter's Service)

London, June 2.—In connection with the apprehensions, expressed by France with regard to the negotiations with M. Krassin, the head of the Russian Trade Mission—especially the fear that France's claims on Russia may be prejudiced by Great Britain receiving Russian gold in exchange for supplies—Reuter understands that the fundamental purpose of the negotiations is to establish trade relations.

It may be necessary to employ a certain amount of gold in order to finance the beginning of these operations, but the British Government, like the rest of the Allies, is seeking, not gold, but food and raw material for Western Europe.

It is emphasised that the interview between the Premier and M. Krassin was not arranged until the French view had been received, and the Allied representatives will take part equally with the British in all discussions before the Supreme Economic Council.

FLEET IN PACIFIC URGED BY BRITON

Admiralty Lord, However, Asks Private Talk On All Such Matters

(Reuter's Service)

London, June 1.—In the course of the debate in the House of Commons today on the Navy estimates, Commander Carlyon Bellairs said that he hoped the the Imperial Defense Committee would soon meet to consider naval policy.

He asked whether the Fleet was to be concentrated at home or whether Britain was to have great Pacific Fleet, and added that, now that there was no menace in the North Sea, the Empire must have an outlook on the Pacific.

Admiral Sir Reginald Hall thought that naval policy should be left to the Committee of Imperial Defense and not discussed on the floor of the House.

ASKS FOR PRIVACY

Mr. Long agreed with the latter speaker and added that there were certain matters of policy which could not be discussed in the House of Commons. He mentioned that a whole series o questions of future policy were before the Committee for examination. Such a declaration of policy as could be made would be made as soon as the Admiralty saw its way clear.

ALL OIL DRIVEN

Referring to criticisms, Mr Long denied that the Admiralty was spending more than it ought on oil fuel bases. Every ship that was now turned out was oil driven. Oil was the fuel of the future and our present command of supplies was small.

It was the bounden duty of the Admiralty to see that our storage was such that it was impossible for our ships to be deficient in supplies wherever they might be throughout the world.

Besides these, two blast furnaces are under construction some distance down the Yangtsze from Hankow at Tayeh.

Dr. Butler Defines Capital And Labor

Emphasises Complete Failure To Grasp Their Significance As Human Factors

Davenport, Iowa, April 24.—Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler spoke twice today in Davenport, in each instance before as many people as could get within sound of his voice.

The first address was at a luncheon given by the Commercial Club.

"The unrest of today," said Dr. Butler, "largely is due to the use of terms in the discussion of economic conditions, which in many instances are not clearly proved. We talk of capital with a capital C and of labor with a capital L. Debates center around these terms, and there has been a complete failure to grasp the significance of capital and labor as human factors.

"Three groups contribute to success of business in America—those who work with their hands, those who work with their savings and those work with their heads. Each is essential and all are interdependent. Clearer understanding of their relationship will make it apparent to all that there must be co-operation and not conflict, so that the production of goods may be multiplied, without which all must suffer.

This evening Mr. Butler addressed a large and enthusiastic audience at the annual banquet of the Davenport Outing Club. In his speech he said:

"What is called Americanisation is a very ugly word for a very necessary undertaking. The fact that for thirty years the large majority of our immigration has been coming from those countries in Eastern and Southeastern Europe, where the population has been oppressed by autocratic and tyrannical government, has brought to our shores a large number of men and women who naturally think of government in terms of antagonism. They must be taught to understand the difference between the autocratic rule of a monarch or a class and those limitations which free people put upon themselves in order to protect the liberty of all and to keep open the door of opportunity.

"Moreover, there has grown up a generation of American born which is careless of fundamental American principles and not always instructed in them. These, too, must be made into real Americans. The task of training the adult immigrant and the American-born child is in all essentials the same. Both have to be taught what liberty really means, how it originated, how it is protected and how easily it may be lost."

PREMIER NITTI SAYS ITALY HAS A SAFE FUTURE

Doesn't Worry Despite The Loud Talk Of Extremists' In Rome Chamber

LABOR TO BE APPEASED

Financial And Industrial Rejuvenation Expected In Two Or Three Years

Rome, April 24.—Premier Nitti, just before he left here for San Remo, made the following statement:

"I am not at all worried over the future of Italy. Despite the loud talk of some extreme elements in our Chamber we are politically more than safe. The labor troubles in Italy will be adjusted in the near future without much difficulty. Financially and industrially Italy in two or three years will be in a better position than most big nations in Europe.

"I must ask you not to send to your newspaper for the present what I am saying, for I am preparing a comprehensive statement for the American press which I shall give out in a few days."

Premier Nitti has just made that statement in San Remo. In it he bitterly denounces the libelous reports spread abroad about Italy. It is considered here as one of the best and strongest utterances that has come out of Italy in many a season.

This able defense of his country, together with the victory which he obtained in Parliament recently, and the influence he is exercising in world questions, has won for Nitti the name of the "Lloyd George of Italy." People here seem to be more and more convinced that he is one of the ablest captains that has ever guided the Italian ship of state.

ARDENT FISHERMAN

But despite his exceptional ability as a figurative pilot if he should be asked what kind of a craft he would rather be a captain of he would undoubtedly answer: "If you wish to please me most give me a fishing boat in the neighborhood of Amalfi or Sorrento." Fishing is his greatest hobby and the only sport he indulges in.

In 1917, while in Paris, he had a long conference with M. Painleve, then the French War Minister. State affairs took only fifteen minutes of their time. The other hour and a quarter they were together they talked about fishing. Nitti, who spends most of his summer vacations on a fishing boat and who counts among his closest friends scores of humble fishing folk, can tell many an interesting story on this subject. He is a remarkable story teller and entertains with his sharp wit and delicious humor groups of people for hours at a time.

Premier Nitti is known for his fearlessness and for his ability to preserve his characteristic smile and his calmness under any circumstance. In 1917, on a visit to the French front, he insisted on going as near the enemy lines as possible.

At the Chateau de Coucy, within two miles of the Germans, the German artillery, having detected his automobile, opened fire upon it. As the shells continued to come, he said smilingly to the correspondent who was hiding with him behind a pile of stones:

"Are you counting the shells? That's the fifth. I wonder how many more they will have to waste before they get us."

In complete contrast with this absolute control of emotions under distressing conditions one finds that some ridiculously insignificant thing can shock the Premier's nerves violently. Once at a luncheon in Washington during his visit in America as a member of the Italian High Diplomatic Mission he was talking pleasantly when at the sight of a basket of fruit the butler was passing him he shuddered and gave a repressed scream.

HATES 'VELVETY THINGS'

When he recovered from the shock he explained that he cannot stand the proximity of velvety things, and the butler had put peaches right under his nose. He explained further that his wife or any other woman who knows him will never go near him if she is wearing velvet clothes.

Speaking of Madame Nitti, one of the Premier's most attractive traits is his adoration of her. In all earnestness he gives her credit for more than half of his success. He has written about a dozen important books and he always asserts with evident pride that if he had not had the help and the sound constructive criticism of his wife he either would never have written them or they would not be worth reading.

Another admirable trait is his readiness to listen to advice. He is perhaps the most progressive man in Italy. If the old way does not work he is always ready to try a new one pointed out to him. He has been accused, for instance, of being rather too friendly to the socialists. His answer is that in a small measure the socialist program contains something new which is an improvement on the old. He cannot see why the good part of that program cannot be applied, at the same time rejecting the parts which are useless.

NITTI WORKS LONG AND HARD

Premier Nitti is an exceptionally hard worker. For long periods he has been known to work steadily for eighteen hours a day. In order to be able to do this without undermining his health he adopted long ago, a set of simple and in part queer rules which he has been following scrupulously ever since. For example, to avoid injuring his lungs by curving his back he never sits down when he works. He does all his reading and his writing standing at a desk purposely built for his height.

His most peculiar rule, however, is the one he follows in regard to smoking. Nitti loves to smoke, especially cigarettes, and when he does smoke he does it incessantly. But realising that a continuous use of tobacco would harm him he came to the conclusion that some moderation was necessary.

Mrs. W.W. Lockwood Discourses On Jades

Interesting Paper Presented At Department Meeting Of Woman's Club

Mrs. W. W. Lockwood's paper upon jades at the Literary Department of the American Woman's Club, held close interest of a large group Thursday afternoon. It was illustrated by screen-pictures.

"To write comprehensively the story of jade in China," she said, "would be to write the inner life of the people, so interwoven has its usage been with the religious rites, ceremonial and social customs. Chinese religious concepts have found their most characteristic expression in objects of jade.

"From ancient times jade has been held the most precious of precious stones, symbolic uses having imparted to it a value far above its intrinsic worth. It was supposed to have been forged from the rainbow into thunderbolts for the storm-god; to be the food of the gods, and endowed with many magical qualities. It was supposed to have power to secure immortality, for which reason it was powdered for imperial food, and amulets made of it to place with the dead."

TOLD ITS HISTORY

Beginning with the stone-age, from which examples of chisels, hammers, knives and daggers have been found, Mrs. Lockwood described the uses and kinds of jades as symbols of sovereign power, emblems for religious worship, amulets, figures of animals and insects from the tombs, coins, seals and personal adornments. Jades of the 18th century were described, a period of production unsurpassed in delicate beauty of form, design and execution.

"The tale of jade," the paper closed, "isn't yet fully told. As long as love of beauty exists in Chinese hearts, and Chinese lapidaries fashion gems of such delicacy and skill, and travelers seek so eagerly these precious stones, so long will the story of jade continue."

The business meeting preceding the paper, was given over to annual reports of the Chairman, Treasurer and program committee. In all 134 members, with an average attendance of 45 were reported. Six lectures by non-members and nineteen papers by members were contributed. A continuation of art study and beginning upon literature is planned. An expression of gratitude was voiced for help of various sinologues and collectors, and to the Royal Asiatic Society for many favors. A fund of $48.95 for books, was reported.

Local Societies To Present Envoy Yang With Tablet

To show their appreciation to Mr. Yang Teheng, Special Envoy of Foreign Affairs, for his efforts in industrial encouragement, a number of local organisations in Shanghai will present him with a commendatory tablet inscribed with the chinese legend "Long Will His Effort Benefit Us."

The idea was originally proposed by the Overseas Chinese Union and the Cantonese Resident Corporation, but upon the request of many other societies, the promoters have decided to invite the other local organisations to join them in the presentation. The latter, however, are requested to send in their names to either of these organisations within three days from today.

No Recognition Of Mexico Yet, Says U.S. Board

(Reuter's Service)

Washington, June 1.—The Committee of Inquiry into conditions in Mexico has reported, recommending the withholding of full American recognition of the new de facto Government until an agreement has been reached on the question of the revision of the 1917 Constitution in the form of a Treaty.

If the Mexican Government refuses, the Committee recommends that it be notified that all those responsible for the sufferings of Americans in Mexico, will be held to a definite reckoning.

If Mexico fails to restore order, the report adds an armed force should be sent there to open up communications between Mexico City and every border town and port.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

The Effects of Opiates.

THAT INFANTS are peculiarly susceptible to opium and its various preparations, all of which are narcotic, is well known. Even in the smallest doses, if continued, these opiates cause changes in the functions and growth of the cells, which are likely to become permanent, causing imbecility, mental perversion, a craving for alcohol or narcotics in later life. Nervous diseases, such as intractable nervous dyspepsia and lack of staying power, are a result of dosing with opiates or narcotics to keep children quiet in their infancy. The rule among physicians is that children should never receive opiates in the smallest doses for more than a day at a time, and only then if unavoidable.

The administration of Anodynes, Drops, Cordials, Soothing Syrups and other narcotics to children by any but a physician cannot be too strongly decried, and the druggist should not be a party to it. Children who are ill need the attention of a physician, and it is nothing less than a crime to dose them wilfully with narcotics. Castoria contains no narcotics if it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

The signature of Chas. H. Fletcher guarantees genuine Castoria

Physicians Recommend Castoria.

"Your preparation known as Castoria I have used for years in children's complaints and I have found nothing better."
JOHN J. LEPPA, M. D., Cleveland, Ohio.

"I have prescribed your Castoria in many cases and have always found it an efficient and speedy remedy."
A. F. PEELER, M. D., St. Louis, Mo.

"For several years I recommended your Castoria and shall always continue to do so, as it has invariably produced beneficial results."
EDWIN F. PARDEE, M. D., New York City.

"I have used your Castoria in my own household with good results, and have advised several patients to use it for its mild, laxative effect and freedom from harm."
EDWARD PARRISH, M. D., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Your Castoria is a meritorious household remedy. It is purely vegetable and acts as a mild cathartic. Above all, it does no harm, which is more than can be said of the great majority of children's remedies."
VICTOR H. COFFMAN, M. D., Omaha, Neb.

"Your Castoria holds the esteem of the medical profession in a manner held by no other proprietary preparation. It is a sure and reliable medicine for infants and children. In fact it is the universal household remedy for infantile ailments."
J. A. PARKER, M. D., Kansas City, Mo.

50 SOLONS LEAVE FOR NEW YUNNAN SEAT NEXT WEEK

More than 50 members of the Old Parliament, who came here as the result of the oppression of Tsen Chun-hsuan, will leave here for Yunnan on July 12. They will be accompanied by Mr. Chu Fu-chen, Vice-Speaker of the House.

The second contingent will leave Shanghai at the end of the month under the leadership of Mr. Wu Ching-lien, Speaker of the House. All the Parliamentarians will go from here to Hongkong and then proceed to Yunnan where Tuchun Tang Chi-yao has undertaken to accommodate them at his capital.

The action was taken in accordance with the recent decision of the Southern leaders in Shanghai to remove the Constitutionalists' Government from Canton to Yunnan after Tsen has arbitrarily appointed Wen Tsung-yao and Chen Chin-tao Ministers of Foreign Affairs and of Finance respectively.

Sold 1,167,081 lbs. (about 521 tons).

The prices realised during the auction rose to about last week's level in spite of the depressed tone which has prevailed during the week. Bidding was rather spasmodic, but on the whole much livelier than it has been for several auctions.

Standard Ribbed Smoked Sheet opened rather poorly at about 71½ cents, but increased gradually until 73½ cents was established, this price being fairly well maintained. A decline of one cent—on the week is shown for Standard Sheet. There was also a fair demand for Good F.A.Q. Sheet but Off Quality Sheet was difficult of sale.

Standard 1st Latex Crepe was more or less neglected, there being few buyers or sellers of this grade, 73½ cents was realised for a few lots, showing a decline of 5½ cents on the week.

Fine Brown and Good Brown Crepes sold easily at about 2½ cents decline on the week, whereas Good Dark and Barky Crepes show a slight increase.

At the continuation this morning 74 cents was paid for Standard Sheet, whereas practically all other grades remained unchanged from yesterday.

WATERWORKS SUPPL

A Calaveras Hold-Up — By Roberta Littlehale

ONE sunny Summer noon of the year 1880, a man lay under a clump of chaparral at the base of a scrub-oak, near a roadside in the Calaveras foothills. He lay on his stomach, with his head on his arms; and the flies crawled over the dirt on his clothes and the pistol at his belt, only suffering disturbance because of the industry of the black ant colony which had discovered meat among the bread crumbs that had fallen from his pocket. He looked asleep, but no one who might have seen, there were slits in the sombrero that covered his head, and the eyes behind them were not closed. Rather, they scarcely winked in the sober scrutiny of their purpose.

The road here near the crest of the hill took a sharp right angle to the north, and picked its way brokenly to the summit over rocks and through stumps and standing trees. To the southwest below, it could be seen for miles on its upward course, appearing and disappearing among the open stretches and the woodland. The scrub-oak would have to lengthen its fat shadow very perceptibly before the man would find it necessary to get on his feet; so he allowed a portion of his attention to revert to the cause of his being here.

Billy Owen was not analytical. He did not go back any farther than his love for a woman as the representative cause of the present effect. The spirit of his ancestors, trained to conquest and struggle, had suffered a taint in the far gone years, and he had become the son of an uncertain race. There were men of them rude in virtue as well as strength, and men of them branded with a shifting eye and hunted step.

Billy had always had his pleasure with a gun in his hand until these wondrous twelve months of his knowledge of Rudy. That that slight person had no acquaintance with the manner of his former life was due to the respect in which Billy held her. For himself, he couldn't get rid of a troublesome pride which he called up the men—the brakemen and engineers and inflated conductors — who had backed away from the steel-ringed mouth of his Colt, his Betty. And the brakemen and engineers and inflated conductors who hadn't backed away, and whom Betty had spat at, gave him almost more pride than the treasures he had borne off from under their bodies.

But a man must be capering to more than one tune if he's to dance in the open all of his life, so Billy had been giving his later days to the panning for gold in secluded spots in the California Sierras; and the first Sunday that he had lent to the village and set apart for the play had been taken by Rudy! He remembered it all very clearly. He had been so careful to shave. Men must remember a moustache of straw color that brought out the steel in his small gray eyes. He had not changed his working dress, for a knife slips down a yawning boot-leg and a flannel shirt yields best to one's muscles in motion.

It had seemed to him queer that the street was so empty. Only occasional men swung in and out of saloon doors, and the rival hotel chairs rested wholly idle. But it was not long before he found the cause. A little paint-blistered church sat around the corner and its open doors had swallowed almost the entire populace. It seemed waiting for more while the thin notes of its rejoicing bell chased each other out on the air. Service must have been about to begin, for there was only a girl standing out on the steps, and the horses in ranks along the fences, who slept or brushed flies or hated their neighbors, as their natures gave impulse. Billy sent the place over to a hotter climate and turned on his heel to shake off its dust just as the restless eyes of a high-headed roan brought him to a halt.

It was then that he had heard a voice he felt he would never forget.

"There is room," it called.

Billy Owen had gone on looking over the roan. He was not the man to waste Sunday in church.

"Father's to preach on fighting," he heard it again. "There are fights that he stands by."

It was a voice, Billy thought, the bees would look for. He threw her a glance that shouldn't reveal any weakness for the sort of blood-spilling that the parson approved of, and straightway forgot to look off again. Rudy Field was smiling at him, and Rudy was radiant with the spirit of well-doing. The bell's noisy excitement had given way to the voices of the people in an opening hymn of thanksgiving, and the girl hurried off the steps, passed the horses, and laid her hand on his arm.

"He says men ought to break each other's noses if there's cause; but it's the cause," she added pregnantly, turning her eyes away toward the church.

"If two men want to get up and fight just for the pleasure of fightin'," said Billy, "and are glad to shake hands when one of 'em is hollerin'?"

Rudy's gentle eyes gave out their inspiration.

"Come and see if he'll say," she said. And Billy went to his undoing. It was never clear to him what the parson's fighting views really were. There must have gone through them fiber of good sort, because he remembered the noisy approval of his fellowmen. As for himself, a straight little form and a thin little face, with a voice singing up to the angels, left no consciousness of a judicial sort. After the last rousing hymn and the dignity of the benediction, he had sat so still that the church was emptying and the parson was up to him.

And the day had taken wings. Billy found through the hours of his lonely working that there was something in his mind supplanting Betty and the bodies which were testimony of his prowess and his power—a something which could not have borne the revelation of Betty and the corpses. But the very instinct that had brought pride and lust of them to Billy was not alive to a shame that threw them over altogether. In the subtleness of conquest they were not the useful weapons.

Rudy's father had been Rudy's life, and she lay awake in the night now, because a man strong in his youth and the power of his love was coming between them. The atmosphere of her training had left her without the protection of suspicion, and Rudy had only the education that her frailness, their poverty and shifting life could yield. Her femininity showed her Billy Owen's masterful physique, his superior strength and tonic vitality. She had begun to have insight into

"Say no more, girl, but the word you love me," said Billy, dropping her hands to come around and take her in his arms.

Billy's will power. But, of all men, he gave to her deference and gentleness and the alertness of his interests.

And what she was conscious must come, came.

Two miners were hurt in an accident by fire, and the minister was called for in the absence of the doctor. He had arranged to hold services in a village three miles north, and Rudy was left to carry to it the news of the church's closing. She put on a sun-bonnet and went out to the barn. The old mare stepped listlessly into the shafts, when a shadow fell over the floor, and Billy filled up the doorway.

"Your father said I was to look out that you got there." He laughed, uncertain still of his welcome.

Rudy had dreaded the lonely twilight drive and her face must have spoken for her tongue had not; but Billy took up the harnessing with a light on his own face that sent Rudy into the depths of her bonnet. She kept on her side of the fat mare, and buckled and strapped in a tangle of leather, with an indiscretion that sent her hands to the cheek at Jane's head just at the moment when Billy's must meet them.

And Billy held them close, while Jane dropped her nose and sniffed at some barley grains, indifferent to the fact that her toilet was forgotten.

"Your father'd give me the word to fight the man that could take ye from me now," Billy said.

And Rudy was whiter than the hair on Jane where it happened to be clean.

"It's my father I shall never leave," she answered him.

"It's the father, His book tells ye, shall be left for the husband."

Billy dropped her hands to come around and take her in his arms.

"Say no more, girl, but the word you love me."

And Rudy had said it: And Rudy had sobbed over it, and laughed over it, and sang over it before the message was delivered and Jane in her stall again.

This was a perplexity Rudy's father laid in heaven's care. "There must be something to live on," he had used as a protest. And what had always made Billy's living but his revolver—his Betty? The mining was snail's pace at best, and with Rudy on his heart there was mad need of haste. With everything at his hand and his Colt ready, there were only the plans, which he straightway laid. Money for the northern mines passed under his nose once every month. Mounted messengers were the things he and Betty were used to, and the advantage of his isolated claim gave him the chance for the doing in the hours of an unoccupied afternoon.

On came the rolling dust, the four horses, the driver, the messenger and the passengers. They must have passed by Rudy's little house; perhaps Rudy had been looking out at them. Well, the fools need not be hurt—it is only to march to the music. The man bent one leg and rested upon his knee to readjust the hot, black mask that covered his face. He peered down the road again. The stage must be half up the last slope. It was out of sight, but the snap of the whip came to his ears as a signal.

"Betty," he whispered close to the barrel, and got on his feet. Against the trunk of the dusty oak a man crouched, with his finger on the trigger of a gun. A stage rocked into view with two betting men, a paid little woman and a Wells Fargo messenger, who sat on the box.

"Halt."

The horses came back on their haunches, the leaders in air.

Betty's steel-rimmed mouth had covered the crowd.

"Throw out your express box and unload your passengers."

Three men and a woman lined along the roadside with their hands to the sky and a green, brass-handled box lay in the dust.

"Out with your horses, my hearty, and line up."

The nerve of one man can undo the natural and customary methods of four of his fellows. The driver took his team to the rear of his passengers, and Billy stepped to the front with Betty as steady as became a woman-of-war.

He ran his eye over the men. It would be time to release the woman when danger was past.

"Fall to on that box," Billy directed. He signaled a man of generous mold and ample manner, and the gentleman stood in his tracks.

"Two," said Billy. "One"——

But the man was in the middle of the road, willing and toolless. An axe was dragged from the stage and he sent the hot fury of his anger into the strokes of the steel.

"Cut the mail pouches," came the next order, and the messenger writhed under cover as he ripped with his knife.

At that moment fell the certain distant sound of approaching horses. Heaven knows there was need of haste, and Billy stood over with curses to emphasize the vigor of his threats.

Sweat fell from the men as he turned to the woman.

"Into the"—— Billy began—and Rudy was looking up at him! Rudy with face like chalk, and the soul of her broken and bleeding.

God! but there is one thing no man can face—the faith of a woman struck back into her heart!

Billy and the revolver wavered in one blindness, and the messenger sprang to his feet.

"Get him," he cried, and his bullet went wide of the mark. Confusion came with the moment. Men leaped to their pockets for weapons and signaled the team coming up.

Billy wasted nothing of the aid Betty held for him. He plunged into the brush at the east with his brain and his heart in the thrall of his shock. About him spit, and crashed, and split a rain of bullets, and he knew there were men of them ready to follow him on the spot.

He swore himself into energy, and beat on through the thick, thorny underbrush with the hope of their disorder sustaining him. There was a small stone corral some one had told him of—Rudy had told him of! It was hemmed in with rocks, and buckeye, and chaparral. For a theatre of war it was setting for a man inside it, and there was only one approach! Rudy had once found herb roots there.

He turned sharp to the south and trailed back again, conscious that his scent was strong and his aim was true—and to the devil with men who had lived peaceful lives in the fields of their country!

Wet drops of something warm trickled down his back. There must be a wound there. Billy forced his way along, cutting through tangles, leaping the rocks and scaling the boulders, only halting for seconds to separate insect noises from that of the hunt of men.

The long, slim shadows of the late afternoon had been swallowed in the monotone of twilight when Billy Owen sat on his heels behind the walls of a stone corral on the sheer slope of a Sierra hill. The fever from his wound was racking his head, but the keenest pain that he suffered was not from that. And there could be no moment of time given over to the undisturbed thought of it. It was only the ever present consciousness through the intensity of attention he imposed on himself. His senses were preternaturally alert; they made record of the nightwalkers' whining and the life of the lizards in the wall at his face.

But it was Rudy's face that was searing with fire the brain of the man—Rudy's face, which had known only love for him, and trust in him, and pride of him. If scorn over him cold that her scorn of him might set them on his track. She might guess what he would make for.

Hark! there could be no mistake—a step. He had been waiting hours for it. It could come. He needed no change of movement to send it into silence.

There it comes again, on and on. The fool! Does he think his life is worth juggling for?

A hand shows through the bushes at the gate of the corral. Billy is forced to turn; it is some one who knows the run of the land. A black figure thrusts through the branches and Betty throws out her ball of death.

"Billy," he heard in its last terrible note of misunderstanding.

He sits in the open and holds her in his arms. Her black hair hangs over her face, and he thrusts it back to clasp her against his breast, against his lips.

At midnight they find Billy Owen, the bandit. There is a woman in his arms, and their lives have gone out on a common search.

Cotton Market

Messrs. A. B. Rosenfeld and Son write as follows in their report dated June 5:

China Cotton.—The developments in the situation during the early part of the week occasioned only moderate price changes. At the close the predominating sentiment was in favor of higher prices as far as the Tungchow staple is concerned, presumably due to the scarcity of stocks here and the small commitments from interior marts. Furthermore, weather conditions have also strengthened the market on account of the very unsatisfactory climatic reports from all the sections of the cotton belts. Farmers are making fair progress with chopping; stands are a little irregular but if hot weather sets in which in the next week and the farm in the interior is not interrupted by rain, we think the crops will be in good condition by the middle of June with acreage fully as large as last year.

The situation continues to hinge on future weather developments and in our opinion holds out every prospect for a continuance of steady markets.

From the above it will be seen that whatever views are entertained as the ultimate course of prices a conservative policy appears to be desirable for the immediate future.

Yarn.—There was a better feeling in Yarn Circles during the first part of the week, and inquiries for new business with the Mills have been reported, also spot prices are quoted as ruling strong. General conditions in the interior marts are healthy considering that they are practically bare of stocks. As soon as the crops have had the farmer's attention, a healthy revival in trade is looked forward to in the near future. We are in receipt of a wire from India from which we gather that the market there must be very firm, considering that the price asked for Yarn is very much higher than that ruling here.

Messrs. J. Spunt and Co. write as follows in their report dated June 5:

China Cotton.—Since the issue of our last report the market remains practically unchanged, business being limited to insignificant operations, as both mills and speculators seem quite undecided as to the future state of the market, and are therefore holding out for further news regarding the China crop condition, which up to the time of writing seem quite favorable.

American Crop News, however, indicate bullish tendencies. The latest government report issued gives the crop condition at 62.4 which on an estimate makes a crop of about ten million bales and should there be any set back in the China or Indian crops same will no doubt be reflected on our market. Under the present circumstances we feel justified in advising our friends to buy cotton at ruling rates, while there does not appear to be any immediate danger of prices advancing it would be advisable to buy gradually before any regular buying commences, most mills being well stocked from 2 to 4 months ahead and with silver declining as it has done, purchase from India do not compare so favorable as hithertofore.

Crop News.—Better reports are coming from Tientsin section where they have had abundant rains during the past week. Tone of the market, steady.

BIRTH

LINTON: On June 2nd, at London, England, to Mr. and Mrs. Philip Linton, a son.

The Pall Mall Gazette Settles It

WE commend your attention today to the leading article from The Pall Mall Gazette, dealing with the Anglo-Japanese Alliance and the question of its renewal. We have put it on the front page because Reuter's has put itself to considerable expense in sending it all the way out here and therefore you really ought to read it—if for no other reason than out of deference to Reuter's.

Reuter's is a great news gathering agency; it is even greater as a news gatherer than it is as a news disseminator. And it cabled this leading article all over the world because it thought it important; either that, or because nothing happened in London that day. Incidentally, we could have wished for some London comment on the Bland articles by representative London journals.

It is really amazing how hollow and empty the most impressive words and phrases can sound sometimes. For instance, Bland saying: "The main purpose of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance is to protect and preserve the integrity and independence of China and maintain in China the principle of the Open Door." It is a good, big mouthful of words. And that is all it is. Bland himself says so. But it does have a certain ring to it, a good, old-fashioned antebellum ring.

The writer in The Pall Mall Gazette, however, is not to be mentioned in the same class with Bland. Bland has a keen mind, full information and a graceful pen. The Pall Mall scribe doesn't qualify in any one of the three. So that he either has to say the obvious or commit blunders. He does both.

Thus he says, grandly: "Co-operation between Great Britain and Japan is vital to the tranquility of almost half the world." One can visualise him as pausing after having delivered himself of this while he reached for another blob of ink. This sentence supports our allusion to remarks that are obvious. Only why did he limit the tranquility to half the world? Co-operation between Great Britain and any other big country is vital to the tranquility of the whole world.

"With a clear understanding between Great Britain and Japan it should be possible, not only to advance the development of China, but also to effect a great economy in the military and naval force in the oversight of the Pacific, and even to prepare the way for a closer understanding between America and Japan." You will note that as soon as he hits the Pacific he gets himself into deep water. Great Britain has entered two alliances with Japan on a clear understanding, and now Bland has been out here and has found that Britain never did have a clear understanding with Japan. As to "advancing the development of China," we have only to refer to the 21 demands and to the secret treaty regarding Shantung. And as to "preparing the way for a closer understanding between America and Japan"—well, our typewriter balks at that sentence.

As to the alliance being able "to effect a great economy in the military and naval force in the oversight of the Pacific," we suppose he means by this that Great Britain will be able to call home the large army and navy she maintains out here.

He also thinks it would be possible to "introduce safeguards which would allay American and Australian nervousness." This is almost the best sentence, although there is one coming that is better. We merely pause to ask where he learned that America and Australia were nervous? The only nervous parties, we should say, are the parties to the proposed alliance. Japan is nervous because she fears Britain will not renew and Britain is at least worried by the problem of whether or not she should renew.

The best comes, as it should, at the end: "Japan cannot avoid an overflow of her population, but there are areas of expansion more accessible and more congenial than any which need trench upon the vital interests of the British Empire or the United States."

There you have it! With one grand splash of ink the whole thing is settled. "Areas of expansion more accessible and more congenial." Another fine mouthful of words. Japan, he decides, will not find it necessary to take any territory from Britain or the United States, and she has already said that she doesn't want any Siberian territory, which while fairly accessible is by no means congenial.

There is, therefore, only one area of expansion that fits his description, "accessible and congenial," and that is Chinese territory. But as Mr. Bland says "The main purpose of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance is to protect and preserve the integrity and independence of China," so it was really clever of The Pall Mall Gazette writer not to mention what he meant. Wasn't it?

McTYEIRE'S ADVISORY BOARD

Editor, THE CHINA PRESS

Dear Sir: May I not, through the medium of your kind paper, request "A Father" of a McTyeire student to enlighten me regarding his statement of the four Chinese serving on the Advisory Board of the school for the last seven years? It is not unlikely that "A Father" is one of them.

He has also mentioned something about the Chinese Trustees at St. John's and other mission schools, which as far as I know, do not exist. Yours etc.

How Inflation Touches Every Man's Pocketbook

Primer In H. C. L., Prepared By Expert, Shows Why Dollar Does Only Half As Much Work As Before War

The writer of this article is Professor of Political Economy at Johns Hopkins University and has been commissioned by the Government on many occasions as an expert in fiscal affairs and taxation for service in our territories and island possessions. He is the author of various books, including "The Abolition of Poverty," and is commonly regarded as one of the foremost American authorities on currency inflation. For that reason he was asked to write this article in a way understandable to laymen.

BY JACOB H. HOLLANDER, Ph. D.
(New York Times)

Political economists often use a language of their own instead of every-day speech. Sometimes this is only a bad habit. More often, like the jargon of the baseball fan and the slang of the schoolboy, it is a sort of verbal shortcut, easy enough for those who follow the game, but very hard for those who do not.

It is unnecessary that this should be so. Economic laws can be made plain to any child of 12. It is just as easy to show an average man or woman of common sense, who is willing to listen and to think, why the cost of living is high as it is to explain how lightning comes with a thunderstorm or why gasoline makes an automobile move. We are not born with such knowledge, but we gain it readily. So, too, instead of merely bemoaning the High Cost of Living, we ought to be willing to spend a little time in finding what has caused it and how we may hope to see it reduced. This is what I shall try to do. If I fail, it will not be because the thing cannot be done, but only that I have not been able to do it.

In the first place, let us make sure that we are clear as to what is meant by the High Cost of Living. Higher prices for the things we buy—of course. But something more than this. If our earnings and savings grew just as much and just as quickly as prices rose, we should be no worse off. There would be some grumbling that a fatter pay envelope meant no bigger market basket, and it might be thought unjust to be left merely standing still while the rest of the world moved on, especially for those who have worked harder and with better result. But there would be no real harm done.

The situation is much more serious, however, if over and above this disadvantage, the prices of the things which we are in the habit of buying have risen higher than have our earnings—to say nothing of our savings—so that we can buy less, even though we seem to be receiving more. Not to move ahead is a very different thing from actually slipping back. The high cost of living means this kind of slipping back.

OUR 50-CENT DOLLAR

We are not left to guess as to just how high prices have risen. Every one feels from personal experience that things cost more—just as he does that April days are milder than December weather. But a general impression of this kind would not carry us very far. So, just as we turn to the thermometer and the Weather Bureau records to learn how much warmer May day is than Christmas, we should consult the Index Number of Prices of the United States Bureau of Labor to find out how much higher prices are today than, say, five years ago. The Index Number is an average of the prices of a great many different things, arranged to show the movement from month to month and year to year. We may use it with as much confidence in talking about rising prices as we do the thermometer in speaking of hot or cold weather.

The Index Number tells us that between 1914 and 1920 wholesale prices have risen from 100 to 253, and retail food prices from 100 to 200. In other words, retail food is twice as high, and wholesale goods two and a half times as high as five years ago. The high cost of living thus reduces itself to the cold hard fact that a dollar spent on the ordinary things which we are accustomed to use will buy only one-half of what it would have done five years ago.

It is certain that a swift, sharp rise in prices such as this must have had very grave and far-reaching effects. In the first place every man's savings have been cut in half, as far as their real worth is concerned. This is true of savings banks deposits, paid-up or part-paid insurance policies, building and loan association funds, mortgages and securities of all kinds. It is true that both rich and poor are hurt in this way, but the man of means will feel it very much less than the man in moderate circumstance. Should prices fall again to their old-time level, those who have been able to hold on to what they have saved will come out even. But to the extent that low prices do not return, and in so far as actual use must be made in the meantime of what has been put aside for a rainy day, a cruel loss will have been suffered.

In the second place, those who are supported wholly or in part by fixed allowances, such as war pensions, retirement and service grants, annuities, old age benefits, compensation awards, have been hit very hard. Receiving each year or each month a certain number of dollars and no more, they find such dollars, as far as buying power goes, are worth no more than 50 cents.

Finally, come the great army who receive salaries and wages, or at least that part of them whose earnings have increased less rapidly than prices have risen. The salaried classes—clerks, teachers, Government employes—have suffered the grossest injury, for they have been in the main unorganised and unable or unwilling to make a stand for increased pay.

As to wage earners, the evidence is not as complete as it should be. In certain industries and in favored localities wages have not only kept up but have gone beyond prices. Elsewhere it has been either nip and tuck or wages have actually lagged behind prices. But even at best, the workman has been in the position of having to fight and struggle to keep from merely slipping back.

I have spoken thus far of the injury done to earnings and savings. But there is injustice of another kind caused by high prices, and that is the excessive profits which business men of all kinds—manufacturers, jobbers, wholesalers and retailers—are able to read, indeed almost compelled to take in a period of swiftly rising prices. In these last five years a business man could grow rich by merely keeping his goods on the shelf while the market price continued to rise. This is the real story of "profiteering." It is not a vicious habit which has suddenly come over the business world and which can be stopped by putting men in jail. It is a symptom of the disease, not the disease itself. Profiteering is the effect, not the cause, of the high cost of living. Those who have been trying to make the American people believe that profiteering causes high prices are in a class with the quacks who would tell a consumptive that his loss of weight is due to his high color instead of saying that both are the symptoms of the tissue-destroying bacillus.

AS CAUSE OF UNREST

The largest, and perhaps the most serious, consequence of the high cost of living is what we have come to speak of as social unrest. The minds of many thousands, perhaps hundreds of thousands, of decent God-fearing men and women in this country are disturbed that such things as have been described above should have been permitted to come to pass. It has made them ask whether there can be anything out of joint in our economic system or grossly wrong in our political order. It is not only anarchists and Reds who say or think these things. Advantage has doubtless been taken of the unsettlement by firebrands and malcontents. But it is burying our heads ostrich-fashion not to realise that conditions have been favorable to such propaganda.

Now, what is the cause of this tremendous rise in prices? Probably a number of things have something to do with it, and there may be a grain of truth in each of the forty-odd explanations that have been given. But we should distinguish between the one great cause that is directly responsible and the host of minor influences that have had a latter effect.

This one great cause is that the amount of money which the Government and the banks have supplied the country for the purpose of carrying on its business is twice as great as it was five years ago. The business of the country consists in producing goods and services and in exchanging them. To make this easier and more convenient we use money—pieces of gold and silver, bits of engraved paper, checking deposits in banks. It is necessary to remember that the largest part of the country's real money is not that which is carried in wallets or kept in cash registers, but consists of deposits in banks created by the banks' loans. These loans become checking accounts for purchases and payments. If, for instance, a clothier borrows $10,000 from his bank, this becomes an addition to his checking account and his checks serve instead of gold or bank notes. Such a loan, so used, is as real an addition to the money of the country as newly minted coins or freshly issued notes.

If the Government borrows from the banks on certificates of indebtedenss, in this same way, or one of the buyers of Liberty bonds borrows from his bank to pay for them, there is the same trend of addition to the country's real money. Such units of money serve exactly as counters or chips in a game; each one commands a certain value.

Now, if the number of chips or counters be suddenly doubled two will be needed where one before had served. This is what has happened in the business world.

The amount of things to be exchanged—goods and services—is practically no greater than it was before the war. But we have been supplied with twice as much money to do this exchanging. Consequently two dollars are worth no more than one was before; or, what amounts to the same thing, prices have doubled. This condition of having twice as many money units with which to carry on the country's business is what we mean by inflation.

How has this inflation come about? And was there no way of escaping it? It is right that we should try hard to answer this question, not only to place responsibility where it belongs, but also to avoid further error; and, most of all, by retracing our steps to undo all or some part of the mischief.

The answer is that inflation is due to the financial mistakes of the Administration at Washington: (1) while we were getting ready for war, (2) while we were at war, and (3) after war was over. During each of these periods the Treasury permitted and, indeed, encouraged an increase in the country's money supply, with the certain prospect of rising prices. This statement calls for some further explanation.

(1) From the outbreak of the war in August, 1914, until the United States began to fight, we received a great flow of gold from the Allies to pay for war supplies. This in itself would have been a dangerous addition to our stock of money, and unless corrective measures had been taken, a certain cause of rising prices. No such corrective measures were taken.

More than this, important changes were made in our banking system by which the new gold, as well as that which we already had, was transferred to the banks for use as the basis for creating huge additional amounts of credit or bank money. This was made possible by allowing the banks, in the first place, to use smaller percentages of reserve against the credit which they provided, and, in the second place, by permitting them to use other forms of security than gold as reserve. In other words, from 1914 to 1917 the United States added largely to its money supply, and arranged to pyramid on the increase whenever it desired.

WHERE TREASURY ERRED

(2) This pyramiding power was used by the Treasury during the war as a means of supplying itself cheaply and easily with funds. It was done in two ways: First by placing certificates of indebtedness with the banks and receiving in payment new and additional credit, and, second, by selling bonds at an artificially low interest rate, with the aid of cheap borrowing facilities at the Federal Reserve banks, so that bond buyers found it easier to obtain additional credit from the banks to pay for their bonds rather than use their savings or such bank deposits as they already had.

Even from the standpoint of the Treasury this was a short-sighted, mistaken and costly economy. During the civil war Secretary Chase obtained money cheaply, as he supposed, by issuing greenbacks, but we know now that the higher prices which the Government had to pay in consequence for its supplies cost the country more than the greenbacks yielded, to say nothing of the further inquiry they caused. In the present war the printing presses could probably not have worked fast enough, so instead of making and issuing additional paper money the Treasury made and used additional bank credit. Just as we speak of the greenback as fiat money, so it is right to speak of Government bank deposits made in this way as fiat credit.

(3) We can understand that mistakes may have been made before we entered the war, because our Federal Reserve System was new and the facts that we had to face were new. Even more, while we were in the war it might be said that we could take no chance in the matter of raising funds for ourselves and our Allies, and it was right to use those means which would give quick results, even though the after effects may have been uncertain. But neither of thse excuses can serve to explain or justify what we did after the armistice, and particularly from last Summer on.

Our Government came out of the war with a big floating debt, that is, with nearly three billion dollars of unpaid bills over and above the Liberty and Victory Loans. Now, instead of meeting this squarely, the Treasury kept the fact steadily in the background, and extended and renewed its bank loans by further short time borrowing of the same kind, that is to say, the Treasury sustained and renewed its floating debt by having the banks create additional credit, which it might draw upon and spend, and which when so spent would find its way into the bank account of others and so swell the total amount of money in the country.

This was inflation pure and simple. It meant that the country was being provided week after week with more money, not because our trade and business required it, but because the Treasury found it easier to supply itself in this manner rather than to get what it must have by taxes or by real borrowing from investors.

It ought to be added that the banks were always willing although not enthusiastic to make such credit advances because they could in turn borrow from the Federal Reserve Banks at rates cheaper than the returns which the Government paid them.

OTHER FACTORS ARE MINOR

Is inflation then the one and only cause of the high cost of living? Have such things as high wages, excess profits taxes, lessened production—to single out the more prominent—had nothing to do with it? Of course they have. But they have been contributing, not primary causes. Our country is too vast and our business life too complex for a sudden change to come about in one part without starting a host of other changes. Throw a stone in a pond and the shore line will be disturbed not only by the first swell but by the series of ripples that the back-wash causes. I contend that inflation is the primary cause of high prices, and that such things as excessive wages, burdensome taxes, restricted production are secondary causes that would have had little effect but for the primary cause.

But interesting as it may be to know the cause of high prices, and important as it is to consider this effect, the real question in which we are all concerned is—the remedy. Assuming that inflation has caused the mischief, what are we going to do about it.

I believe firmly that a considerable part of the mischief can never be undone. Much of it has already happened; more of it is certain to come before relief will be afforded. If we try a short-cut treatment we shall certainly bring on a business crash in which the operation may be successful but the patient will die.

But, on the other hand, we should certainly not sit by with hands folded and wait piously and resignedly for things to improve, as long as there is a chance that by wise and intelligent action we can contribute to that end.

REMEDIAL POSSIBILITIES

There is such a chance and here are the particulars: First, the Government at Washington should stop, first, last and all the time, adding to our money supply. This means that our $3,000,000,000 floating debt should be cared for, not by having the banks manufacture more credit for the Treasury, but that the deficiency should be met by reducing expenditures or by increasing tax revenue or by issuing debt obligations which investors would absorb from their savings.

In the second place, having seen to it that no additional credit money is made we should try wisely but bravely to reduce that vast amount which is in existence. The way to do this is to encourage and support the Federal Reserve Board in the policy, which they were slow in adopting but are now steadily following, of making it more costly by means of stiffened discount rates and penalty charges for the banks of the country to create such additional credit. The result may be to reduce speculation in goods and real estate as well as in securities, and, to some extent, to burden and restrict legitimate business. The first is a good thing in itself; the second is an unfortunate penalty of our past mistake. It is the bitter tasting, unpleasantly acting medicine which we must take to recover from a credit orgy.

In the third place, we should do everything in our power to increase production. If the amount of money and credit in the country as compared with the amount of goods and services is so great that prices are high the way to correct matters is not only to reduce the money supply, but to increase the mass of goods.

In the fourth place, our faces should be set firmly in the direction of greater public economy and greater private thrift. Only if the Government spends less, can public debts be reduced and heavy taxes be lowered, and the danger of still further inflation be averted. Only if we save more will it be possible for our industrial capital to be renewed and our national production to be increased.

Finally, our war system of taxation should be changed to meet peace conditions. I am unable to agree with those who speak and write of the income and excess profits taxes as the prime cause of high prices, to the neglect of the greater factor of a doubled money supply. But on the other hand, our war taxes are clearly operating as a drag upon peace time industry and there is great need of change and revision.

This then is my final word: Stop wailing about the high cost of living and do a little hard thinking of your own as to what has brought it about and how it can be helped.

An Unusual Look

"Do you think this new photograph of mother looks like her, father?" asked the daughter.

"No, I don't," replied the father.

"What do you suppose is the matter with it?"

"Why, I suppose the man told your mother to look pleasant and she was trying to do it."

"One leads where many follow."

Striking Examples Of U. S. Immigrants Who Rise

(N. Y. Sun and Herald)

Because of a preponderance of notice being taken nowadays of the immigrant tainted with Bolshevism some people may forget the many eminent examples of alien introduction into America's body politic with fine results, and, as a matter of fact, if a census showing the desirable and the undesirable could be taken, the former would dwarf the latter almost to nothingness.

It is as well for patriotic Americans to keep in mind the individual cases that have come under every man's notice that prove the wonderful and beneficial results of our melting pot. The history of some of them, while simple, nevertheless has romantic features. There is, for a striking example, M. I. Pupin, professor of electro mechanics at Columbia University since 1901. He is secretary of the Inter-racial Council at 120 Broadway. This is an organisation made up of representatives of thirty-two racial groups in America. In 1917 Professor Pupin presented to the United States Government an invention eliminating static interference with wireless transmission.

Speaking recently of the subject of immigration, Professor Pupin said that he was an American of Jugo-Slavic birth and he came to America in the steerage of the steamship Westphalia in 1874: in his pocket was five cents and in his hand a piece of apple pie. Now he modestly wears the titles of Ph. D., Sc. D. and LL. D.

"Nothing," said he, "is so tragic and so touching as to leave one's native land. The reason that our citizens or intending citizens settle in colonies is based on a need of human nature; the immigrant yearns for the companionship of his countrymen.

"I do not know whether my struggles as an immigrant were greater than my struggles in immigration work. As president of the Slavonic Immigrant Society and of the Serb Federation for eleven years my experience has convinced me that you cannot handle the immigrant except through an American citizen of his own race."

While the immigrant and his groping toward Americanism can be well studied in New York the study is not confined to this city. There follows an excellent anecdote of his success in the middle West.

Two brothers who six years ago were working in the Planters and Jefferson hotels in St. Louis as busboys at $1 a day have recently purchased for $350,000 two large moving picture theaters, running their string of film houses up to nine. These nine movie theaters have an annual gross revenue of $775,000.

The brothers are Charles Skouras, 30 years old, 5759A McPherson avenue, and Spyros Skouras, 27 years old, 5915A Etzel avenue. In 1914 they decided to quit working as hotel busboys and invest their savings in some paying business. Unlike many of their fellow countrymen from Greece, they did not invest in a candy kitchen or restaurant. The moving picture business was developing rapidly at the time and they decided to try it.

They bought a $5,000 interest in the Olympia Theater, a nickelodeon, at Fourteenth and Market streets, four blocks from Union Station. They had to obtain assistance from friends in raising the money for the deal. It was not long before they bought out their associates in the Olympia.

Under the name of the Olympia Amusement Company the brothers a year later branched out. They purchased the Lafayette Theater in South St. Louis. Business was so good that in six months they were able to buy the Pageant Theater and Crystal Airdome in the West End, a fashionable residence district. To turn this deal they sold the Olympia and Lafayette theaters.

Last summer they purchased the West End Lyric, the Lyric Skydome and the Downtown Lyric. Last October they bought the Shaw, a south side theater. Their latest purchases are the New Grand Central and Grand Central, from City Collector Goeln.

And here is the story of the upward climb of C. C. A. Baldi of Philadelphia, who began with nothing and is now one of America's foremost citizens of foreign birth and a millionaire. When he landed in New York thirty years ago he had a few pennies in his pocket, the pocket of a pair of ragged trousers. He had no English and knew nothing of American customs, but he had heard of the opportunities that America offers to a wide awake, ambitious immigrant willing to work.

With his few pennies Baldi bought thirty lemons and peddled them. From the money received he bought more lemons and peddled them. Before long he had a pushcart loaded with hundreds of lemons. And as he went about selling them he studied America with his bright eyes and learned a few words of English. These he increased day by day until he knew the language and had begun to understand the country. In time the pushcart became a store and the store grew into a great business, with banking and other departments.

Baldi was always a capitalist, but at first he capitalised what he had in common with the best immigrants of every race. He capitalised his energy, enterprise, ambition and willingness to work. Throughout his life in this country Baldi has not forgotten Italy, and he has always been ready to help other Italian immigrants to better the condition of themselves and their families. This has made him a better American.

Millionaire Baldi has five sons, all Americans. One is a member of the State Legislature, one is a doctor, another is a banker; the fourth son is a merchant and the fifth is editor and publisher of one of the largest American newspapers published in a foreign language.

Although the instances cited are salient because of the overwhelming degree of success gained by these particular men, they represent a great and increasing class of splendid citizens, true Americans constructed out of sound foreign stock.

Higher Duties on Whisky Revive Illicit Making of Poteen

Dublin, April 14.—High duties on whisky have led to the continued practice of moonshining and revived the industry of illicit poteen making. The police hunt for secret stills is vigorous and the possession of the spirit is a punishable offense. A Monaghan man who pleaded that the two glasses of poteen found on his premises were intended as a rub for his sister's rheumatism was fined £100 sterling. This was reduced to £6.

Official customs and excise returns show that in 1919 Dublin payments totaled £8,750,000, an increase of nearly £4,500,000 over the figures for 1918. This is due to higher duties and to the fact that in the latter year there was relaxation in restrictions on the quantities of beer and spirits allowed for consumption. Figures for Belfast were a million less than for Dublin and showed an increase of only 20 percent over 1918.

Hard To Locate

"There ain't no ham in this here sanwich," a customer growled, seated on a high stool before the marble bar of a railway restaurant.

"Oh, you ain't come to the ham yet," the attendant answered easily.

The man ate on a while longer. Then he growled again: "Still no ham."

"Oh," said the attendant, "you've bit over it now."

Turkish Rugs.

"The light is poor today," the dealer says,
Stroking a silken weave that stirs and blushes underneath his hand,
As one who says, "She is a little pale just now, my love."
He opens folds of shimmering cloth . . .
One, obeying leisurely his toss, extends along the floor,
Relaxing softly.
Another leaps like some young prince, male, burnished, crimson clad,
Another trails about the room distinguished, slow, serene and silent.
They are leagued with Time and color and with rhythm.
Long, muffled, wondrous years
Like a thin veil upon a Turkish woman's face
Stir in a sheen upon them.
Their hushed and glowing folds
Hold proudly in undying arms
The beauty of their alien race
And all its memories.
Indifferent to our unskilled praise —not to themselves—
Unheeding they are being sold in tall, cold cities of new worlds,
Imperial, they pose and turn and sway
Exulting in their patterns of the bird and swan,
Pomegranate, lotus and the hennaed hands.

Crowded Adventures

Something glittered in the mud of the crowded street. It was a pin. "See a pin and pick it up, and all day long you'll have good luck," Jones muttered as he bent down to recover the pin. He had learned the good old proverb when quite a child. As he bent down to recover the pin his hat fell off and tolled under a cab wheel. His eye-glasses also fell and broke into pieces. A 'bus caught him on one side and a baker's van on the other, the two nearly squeezing the life out of him. He made a dash for the pavement and upset a cyclist. It was an exciting time, but he got the pin.

"PRICELESS"

is a popular way of describing anything which has proved to be of exceptional value, and may therefore be employed to describe that old and favourite preparation—Beecham's Pills. The ever-increasing army of men and women who have experience of this excellent medicine generally use some such phrase as "priceless" or "Worth a guinea a box" when speaking of Beecham's Pills. This is certainly high praise. But it is well-merited. Beecham's Pills have proved, times out of number, to be a "priceless" preparation in the treatment of digestive ailments. They bring relief; they safeguard the health; they effect remarkable cures. All who suffer in any way from biliousness, sick headache, constipation, impaired appetite, and the resulting loss of energy and want of tone should take

HARMSWORTH PAPERS NOW 77

Western Morning News, Influential Publication, Is Newest Acquirement

ALL BIG MONEY MAKERS

Wonderful Record Made By Five Sons Of A Penniless Lawyer

London, April 24.—The purchase of the Western Morning News, the Times of the west of England, by Sir R. Leicester Harmsworth, Bt., M. P., makes the seventy-seventh paper to pass into the hands of the Harmsworth family, a record in British journalism.

News sheets have proved a veritable El Dorado to the Harmsworths. Two viscountcies, a baronetcy, two Cabinet ministerial posts and three memberships of the British House of Commons are some of the most striking rewards of the journalistic enterprise of these five brilliant sons of a penniless lawyer.

Alfred, Viscount Northcliffe, the oldest and most famous of the brothers, established the family fortune on the unexpected success of Answers, a small popular weekly which made a feature of answering "questions from correspondents." Now, in addition to being chief proprietor of the Times, he owns the Daily Mail, Evening News and the Weekly Despatch, as well as over sixty varied weekly and monthly magazines and papers.

Better known as the Viscount Rothermere, the British Air Minister in 1917 and 1918, Harold Harmsworth, the second son and financial genius of the family, began his newspaper fortunes in the provinces with the Leeds Mercury and its associated papers. Then starting the Daily Record, now the leading Scottish newspaper, he took over the London Daily Mirror from his brother, Lord Northcliffe, in 1910, and started the Sunday Pictorial a few years later.

The Western Morning News is the first newspaper of any importance to fall into the possession of Sir Leicester Harmsworth, M. P., the fourth son, whose only paper previously was the Caithness Gazette, a small Scotch local sheet.

The present British Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, Cecil Harmsworth, M. P., the third son, ventured upon only one newspaper purchase, and the negotiations falling through, forsook the press for politics, where, in addition to having been parliamentary secretary to a former president of the Board of Trade, he also acted as Under Secretary for Home Affairs.

While joining his brothers Alfred and Harold at the age of sixteen, the youngest son, Hildebrand Harmsworth, started the New Liberal Review, and becoming sole owner of the Globe for five years, at first bid fair to outstrip even Northcliffe, but his health completely broke down and he is now a confirmed invalid.

JOFFRE FETED IN MADRID

Official And Popular Receptions To Victor Of The Marne

Madrid, April 28.—Marshal Joffre, commander of the armies of France in the first battle of the Marne in 1914, who is visiting Madrid this week, was a guest of honor at a brilliant reception given this afternoon at the Ministry of War. Most of the prominent officers of the Spanish army and navy were present. The reception followed an official luncheon at the French Embassy which was attended by members of the Cabinet, former Ministers, various party leaders and members of the diplomatic corps. Later the Mayor was host to the Marshal at the City Hall, which was beautifully decorated for the occasion.

Early in the day the distinguished warrior was recieved by King Alfonso, his progress to the palace being through streets lined with cheering crowds. The enthusiasm of the people was one of the features of the day. Marshal Joffre receiving an ovation whenever he appeared.

French residents of Madrid and veterans of the World War paid homage to the Marshal tonight.
